12:00-1:00 pm

Pavilion Building Auditorium
109 State Street, Montpelier

Paul Searls's new book, Repeopling Vermont: The Paradox of Development in the Twentieth Century, examines many of the central tensions in Vermont's history and culture over the last hundred years. In this noontime talk about the evolution of Vermont in the twentieth century, Searls will focus on the tension between efforts to preserve the natural landscape and the effect of those efforts on the human landscape, themes that still resonate and inspire passion in today's Vermont.

Dr. Paul Searls is Professor of History at Northern Vermont University, where he specializes in Vermont history. He received his Ph.D. from New York University.
